I've been using it for months now with great success. The app has a ton of valuable information for you to check in on the progress of your baby, is intuitive and user friendly. No need to look for the closest obstetrician for a detailed report of your baby's progress. Get it now and you'll never look back! Reviews for Baby Progress 1.8 Total 734 votes 534 401 180 5 3

0 App is not for me and doesn't have any data We have a baby due in a few months and could really use this app to keep track of things and I was so excited to download it but... It doesn't load data on the first start up (that's the only issue I had, it was supposed to work with my smart watch). So I have the build number 50 and I can't use simple and painless button and keep track of the progress of the pregnancy. Also make sure to refer to your calendar to make sure that the due date on the screen will match what you expect. Baby Progress, Version 7.0.1 Please rate this application, if it does what it is supposed to, when it is supposed to, and how you like it. It is a simple application, you can grab it as a ZIP package in the link above, but the below is a high-level walkthrough for your reference. If you are looking for the source code, please visit the link below, in particular, look for $GetCalcStr. Note: For testing purposes, the below is a modified version. The App Once you have the application installed, you will see the following buttons below the traditional start of the first day of the month and next month label. After hitting OK, the application will open with a main screen and subsequent screens for entering the information of a specific month. You will notice a blue curved line in the top right of the application. That will be the estimated due date. Clicking on it will show the due date in the format DD/MM/YYYY The specific month screen is shown below After hitting OK on the main screen, a calendar page will be displayed that will allow you to enter the day of the month that the period starts. You can type in the number or use the calendar button. At the very bottom of the screen, you will also see the button called "Calculate" that when you click on it, it will calculate the due date of the current month and display it in a label. If you would like to tweak the output of the label, you can also modify the calculations that are performed using the button on the right. The main screen The specifics of the program Baby Progress returns the following variables: Your age Baby's age Baby's sex Mother's age Mother's weight Mother's height Number of previous pregnancies Mother's gravidity (number of previous pregnancies) Mother's parity (number of previous pregnancies) Mother's parity (number of previous deliveries) Parental status (natural/legal) Baby's date of delivery 6a5afdab4c

Click to view the Help menu. Click to view the Help menu. The calculations are made by subtracting 1 week from the week which is 2.6% of a month, then add that and 1 day to the month. The day of the week is not an accurate indicator of when the baby will be born. Different mothers have deliveries on different days of the week. These calculations provide a prediction of when that might occur. Some other factors play a role in determining a due date. A woman's age and first-time-pregnancy can affect the growth of the baby. If the baby is large or the amniotic fluid is low, the estimated due date may be 2-3 weeks earlier or later than a more normal pregnancy. Multiple births and genetic disorders can also cause earlier or later due dates. The calculations of days until delivery are a little trickier than predicting the date of the due date. These calculations are based on dividing the number of days between the due date and the date of the conception by the number of days in a month. Different women have conception dates that are several days different from the due date. While the day

What's New In Baby Progress?

----- Baby Progress displays the days left until the delivery date and helps track the development of the baby The program uses the Information from Period Calendar data (to calculate the delivery date) and will show the calculations in the application tooltip.
